      So, I went on this so-called “date” with a guy  let’s call him Sindor. Honestly, I’m still furious.

```

      I had only 300 bob on me. Yet I still made the effort to go, used up more than that just on transport, and even paid for my own drink. That was already a stretch for me, but I thought, “at least it’s worth it if he planned the date.” Biggest mistake of my life.

```

```

```

      To make it even worse, he had the nerve to call me “average.” Then added that maybe the only thing that stands out about me is my “personality.” Imagine! After I wasted my time, money, and energy just to show up for him.

```

      This wasn’t just disappointing it was disrespectful. I’m beyond mad. I could have done a million better things with that money and that time, but instead I wasted it on a grown man who can’t even show basic courtesy.

      I started working when I was 22 and he was still in med school, still is but this is his final year. Communication has been our biggest issue for the longest time, I try to understand him but at times I don't. He's always busy and broke.

      He has never bought me flowers, never taken me on a date, and we always have issues. I'm the one who does the most. I take him out when he's around, buy him random gifts, host him at my place for a whole week and I'm the one who buys food.

      This is my first guy and the last time we were intimate was a year and a half ago, and believe it or not he's the only man I've been with, and I've been loyal the entire time. At time I feel like he's taking advantage of my innocence but I don't know if I'm overthinking it or not.

      Hey everyone, I’ve been getting more serious about moving into the cybersecurity field, and I figured I’d share what I’ve been working on so far to see if I’m headed in the right direction.

      My questions for those already in the field:

      Does this sound like I’m laying down a solid foundation, or am I missing obvious skills I should be building early?

      Does this sound like I’m laying down a solid foundation, or am I missing obvious skills I should be building early?

      For someone interested in the defensive side, are there particular tools, certifications, or types of labs you’d recommend I focus on next?

      For someone interested in the defensive side, are there particular tools, certifications, or types of labs you’d recommend I focus on next?

How important is it to get really deep into things like Wireshark, Splunk, etc. at this stage versus just continuing to broaden my general skills?

How important is it to get really deep into things like Wireshark, Splunk, etc. at this stage versus just continuing to broaden my general skills?

Any advice, resources, or even stories from your own early days in cybersecurity would be super helpful. I’m trying to approach this in a way that’s both structured but also hands-on, and I don’t want to waste time learning in the wrong order.

P.S Posted in Cyber security help but it got removed :(

      So, I went on this so-called “date” with a guy let’s call him Sindor. Honestly, I’m still furious.

      I had only 300 bob on me. Yet I still made the effort to go, used up more than that just on transport, and even paid for my own drink. That was already a stretch for me, but I thought, “at least it’s worth it if he planned the date.” Biggest mistake of my life.

      I started working when I was 22 and he was still in med school, still is but this is his final year. Communication has been our biggest issue for the longest time, I try to understand him but at times I don't. He's always busy and broke.

      He has never bought me flowers, never taken me on a date, and we always have issues. I'm the one who does the most. I take him out when he's around, buy him random gifts, host him at my place for a whole week and I'm the one who buys food.
